This research seeks answers to some of the questions surrounding whether gender should be recognised as a 'hate crime' category. The survey asks victims of gender-related crime in the UK what happened to them, how it affected them, and what it was about their experience which caused them to think it was gender-related. They are also asked whether they considered this incident to be a hate crime, and whether gender should be recognised as a hate crime in the UK (which it currently is...
