King's College London

We are looking for adults and adolescents (aged 16-60) with ADHD and a comparison group who do not have ADHD. We have developed a set of remote measures to obtain more detailed information, more often, about the wellbeing and behaviours of people with ADHD in their everyday lives, using web-based and wearable technologies.

This 10-week study involves attending two virtual baseline sessions, wearing a Fitbit and using a study Android phone, and
